

DLT Donates Work Hours to Give Back through Local Non-Profit

Program Overview

Over the past year, the DLT Foundation has been spearheading an effort to assist with food preparation at Martha's Table, a non-profit organization located in Washington, D.C.

DLT began volunteering on February 5, 2010, with a team of four DLT employees who did various setup, organizing and sorting of food in order to assist those less fortunate. Since that chilly Friday, DLT has continued its support the first Friday of every month, and has four to eight employees offer their support each time.

"It's good to give back," said Gerald Padmore, sales representative for the Enterprise Data Management Team at DLT, who organizes DLT's volunteering efforts at Martha's Table. "As a company, we've been very supportive and made a small impact on many. Everyone [at DLT] who's gone [to Martha's Table] has been thrilled to help. I hope we can expand this to the office and create meals here as well."

The mission of Martha's Table is "to help at-risk children, youth, families and individuals in our community improve their lives by providing educational programs, food, clothing, and enrichment opportunities."

About Martha's Table

Martha's Table has four programs. "Children & Youth" is geared to those ranging in age from 3 months to 18 years, and nutritious meals, after-school programs, arts and crafts, and more. "Feed the Hungry - McKenna's Wagon" is a food program that provides a daily meal, 365 days a year. "Martha's Outfitters" is a clothing center that provides free and low-cost clothing, linens, toiletries, books and children's supplies. The "Teen Program" works with teens to help them focus on their futures, with college awareness and workshops.

"We are fortunate to work for a company that gives its employees time to volunteer like this," said Christine Schaefer, vice president of marketing. "I enjoyed my turn serving with people from various departments throughout the company. I encourage everyone to take a turn giving just a few hours back through this program."

"This is just one example of how DLT Solutions and The DLT Foundation empower employees to focus our collective resources to give back in our local communities," said Chris Laggini, vice president of Human Resources at DLT Solutions. "I look forward to looking back years from now and reflecting on how much of an impact we have had as a company in the community through programs like this one."

About the DLT Foundation

The DLT Foundation focuses its philanthropic resources in the communities where our employees, vendors, customers and their families live and work. We are dedicated to making strategic investments to meet the most critical needs in our communities.

The DLT Foundation generally provides funds to organizations or individuals that, by their efforts, transform and affect the quality of the way people live. Some of the efforts that we support would be research in the areas of disease and medical treatments, emergency response efforts, community enrichment programs and individual developmental needs.
